Lincoln Estates Man Writes Story of Italian Family

One of the boys in service from this territory, Pvt. Raymond C. Murray of Lincoln Estates, has been inspired to write a short story, taken from his experiences while with the army in Italy. He has written to the editor of this paper to see if we would run it in our columns, and we have written him that we would be glad to do so if it was not too long.

We will publish this story, as Pvt. Murray sends it to us, and we would advise anyone desiring to keep it, to cut it from the paper each time it is run, and in that way have a complete copy of his story.

Following is the Preface and Introduction sent to us from Italy and passed by the Censor.

Ray Murray with captured Nazi flag in Italy

DAWN OF A NEW DAY!
By Raymond C. Murray

Written Summer-Winter 1944
Dedicated to A Typical Italian Family
Preface and Introduction

This is the short story of an average Italian family and its gallant struggle to live in a world torn asunder by war and destruction during and before the collapse of Fascism and rise of a new and more democratic Italy. It is taken from real life and is based on fact gathered thru my personal contact, and by mingling with the people of Italy. And by constant questioning, thru out a year's travel while a member of the hard-slugging Fifth Army.

This story was written, in the hope that it will present to the people of America a view into the saddened yet stout hearts of our Italian Neighbors, thereby gaining a better understanding of the Italian Nation, which "despite its many past mistakes is a great Nation." In short we hope we succeed in our effort to present a great story of a great people!

Permit us to give you our first impression of the characters in our story and other details about them to give you a hint as to what they are like.

THE LUTRARIO FAMILY

Anna—Chief character in our story. Eighteen, Five ft., Beautiful Brunette, flashing eyes. Her story is one of tragedy.

Maria—Plain type of beauty, twenty, slightly taller than Anna, also brunette, easily offended.

Papa—Dark haired, seventy-two, looks fifty, speaks broken English, been to America twice, New York, New Jersey, Likes America and its people.

Mama—Near fifty-eight. Kindly, generous-hearted old soul, always busy and an excellent cook.

Grandma—Ninety - eight. Judging from her youthful appearance she must have been beautiful in her youth.

Angela—Appears to be thirty-three she is constantly kidded by "Papa" because it seems she studied Greek and American for "one whole month!"

"The Partisans"—A small group of Civilian Patriots who wish to remain nameless. Though the credit they receive is very little, their services rendered to their people will never be forgotten!

Last But By No Means Least: Angelo—The son, nineteen, likes musical instruments, smokes the parents dislike it, nothing however is ever said about it.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO WORLD WAR 2 DISCHARGED VETERANS

The American Legion urges all World War 2 veterans to have their Discharge recorded. Take or send them to the County Recorder. There is no charge for this service, and it may save you a lot of inconvenience in later years. Your Discharge is a valuable document and should be protected as such. If you can, it is advisable to have it photostated, and use the Photostatic copy for reference, instead of running the risk of losing the original, which can only be replaced by a certified copy after a lot of correspondence and long waiting. Any American Legion Service Officer will help you in this matter. Remember, an Honorable Discharge from Uncle Sam is the best recommendation any man can show, in any man's language.

Martin H. Uthe, Publicity Chairman, Tinley Park Post 615, American Legion.

LEST WE FORGET

Poppy day will soon be here again so don't forget the date May 26 and this year we make a special appeal to you to buy a poppy for there are more soldiers than ever who need a little help.

You know what they did for you, so now its your chance to help them. Just what will your contribution do? Each year at Christmas time every soldier from our district receives a box of candy and other articles.

We provide layettes for young mothers whose husbands are in the service, we visit or send to veterans hospitals every month such articles as playing cards, games, cigarettes, stamps, writing paper and numerous other articles.

We never forget the soldiers from World War 1 either. Although we don't furnish them so much with candy, or layettes any more, we do come to their assistance with a ton of coal, or a large basket of groceries or clothing so you can see how much your dollars can help us to put a veteran on the right start again, so be sure and wear a Poppy on Poppy Day and know in your heart that you have helped some veteran who has done so much for you.

Thank you,
Poppy Chairman, American Legion Auxiliary Unit 615.

SUPPLY OF TELEPHONES IS STILL RESTRICTED

"Recent reports concerning the partial lifting of restrictions on the manufacture of telephone instruments have given rise to false hopes on the part of people who are waiting for telephone services," Mr. J. N. Westcott, manager for the Illinois Bell Telephone Company, said today. "To the extent that availability of materials and manpower permits, additional telephones will be manufactured, but there is a tremendous waiting list of people who want telephone service, some 1,800,000 of them throughout the country. The communication industry still is obligated to provide equipment to carry on the war and will continue to do so even with the defeat of Germany."

Mr. Westcott said the important thing to remember is that the majority of these 1,800,000 people cannot get service because there are not enough switchboards and other central office equipment, as well as cable and other line facilities which are necessary to provide service.

"Accordingly," Mr. Westcott added, "even if the company had adequate supplies of telephone instruments, which it does not, and cannot expect to have for some time, it would still be quite a while before service could be given to all who want it. The manufacture and installation of central office equipment, which has practically been at a standstill for civilian service during the war, is an intricate and time-consuming operation, much more so than the manufacture of telephone instruments."

We appreciate the patience and understanding shown by those on the waiting list. We are doing our utmost to meet everyone's needs at the earliest possible moment.

Washington, D. C.

RUSSIA AND ALLIES
SAN FRANCISCO. — To the average outsider, the most difficult thing to understand about this conference is the attitude of the Russians. Poor press relations, plus a few inept moves have melted down a large mountain of goodwill built up by the valor of the Red army. In a few short days they have destroyed much of the favorable sentiment in Latin America, and through no fault of ours, won us more friends below the Rio Grande than we ever had before.

One of the things Molotov did in San Francisco was to invite two prominent Latin American delegates to dinner at the Russian consulate, along with a few carefully selected Europeans. Latin guests were Mexico's tall, handsome Foreign Minister Padilla, and Chile's aristocratic Foreign Minister Joaquín Fernández Y Fernández, who is rapidly assuming a new leadership in Latin America.

Molotov drank a toast to Chile and her new establishment of diplomatic relations with Russia.

"There are so many Chileans who want to become Ambassador to Moscow," joked Foreign Minister Fernández in return, "that it is one of my greatest problems." Mexico's Padilla, apparently on excellent terms with Molotov, said: "All Latin America would be pleased if our sister republic, Argentina, was admitted to the conference."

Molotov, in mellow mood, seemed to register no objection.

Mood Changes.
 But a day later the mood was different. Padilla arose in secret session to propose Secretary Stettinius as permanent chairman of the conference. Molotov promptly objected. He pointed out that four countries had invited the other nations to attend this conference and that the representatives of all four host countries should rotate as chairman.

Foreign Minister Padilla then delivered a recitation of previous precedents where the nation which served as host also acted as chairman. When he had finished, Molotov, who had already pointed out that four nations were hosts, got up and remarked:

"I am glad to be instructed in diplomatic procedure by the delegate of Mexico, but apparently he prepared his little speech before he heard my view."

Padilla, who had not read his speech, was taken aback. He mumbled something about always being prepared when he attended a conference, and sat down. After a long, hot debate, Molotov won his point. But the manner in which he jumped on the Mexican lost him friends. A lot of Latins, jealous of Padilla's brilliant oratory, previously had been opposed to him. But Molotov veered them in the opposite direction.

Next day, in secret session, Foreign Minister Jan Masaryk of Czechoslovakia, a nation cooperating with Russia, pointed to the vacant chair of Poland and moved that the Lublin government be admitted. Foreign Minister Subasich of Yugoslavia, also close to Russia, seconded the motion. Whereupon, Anthony Eden, white-faced and prim, emphatically opposed. There followed more hot debate.

Finally, to break the deadlock, Foreign Minister Spaak of Belgium proposed a compromise resolution expressing sympathy with Poland and hoping that she could be admitted soon. Genial, rotund Ambassador Caceres of Honduras, a great friend of the U.S.A., rose to second Belgium.

Whereupon Molotov cracked back: "Notwithstanding the support of the Republic of Honduras, the Soviet Union stands by its position."

Delegates Startled.

A note of biting sarcasm rang through Molotov's voice which startled the delegates. It sounded as if the powerful Soviet Union, representing the greatest land-mass in the world, was trying to put the tiniest republic in Latin America in its place. Again, Russia lost more friends. And later when the vote was taken on seating Lublin Poland, she lost that also.

These are some of the things about the Russians that take a lot of understanding. On the other hand, when Molotov, after winning his point on rotating the chairmanship, finally sat in Stettinius' place, he did an excellent job. He got off a little gag about being glad the conference would now have an opportunity to hear Russian, and proceeded to handle the session in most expert manner.

THE DEFEAT OF THE SOUTHERN KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Jeremiah 18:1-10, 15a, 17a. GOLDEN TEXT—Come, and let us return unto the Lord.—Hosea 6:1.

History repeats itself. Men never seem to learn from the experiences of others, whether they be personal or national. Judah, the southern part of the divided kingdom, saw the downward path of Israel and its ultimate captivity. The same process went on in Judah, although hindered now and then by good kings who brought about a partial return to God.

Ultimately the day came when Jerusalem was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar's troops and the people carried off to their long years of captivity in Babylon.

Jeremiah ministered as God's prophet during Judah's declining years, bringing them God's word of judgment for their sins and urging them to submit. His voice was unheeded and for his faithfulness he received only their hatred and persecution. God gave him the strength and grace to be true in a very difficult mission.

Our lesson for today tells how God in a graphic object lesson taught the prophet and the people that they were in the hands of a sympathetic but at the same time a sovereign God.

I. The Potter and His Work (vv. 1-4).

The maker of pottery took the lump of clay, placed it on his wheel, and with his hand formed it into the kind of vessel he wanted. If it became misshapen or showed a defect, he could moisten and remold the clay into another vessel as it suited him. The clay was in his hand to meet his purpose and his will.

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan fittingly suggests that there are three things to be borne in mind here: a principle, a purpose, and a person. And as we apply the truth to ourselves as God's children, we spell the Person of the Potter with a capital "P," for He is none other than God Himself.

The principle is that God is absolutely sovereign, that He does as He wills for His own glory. Until we recognize that principle, "life will be a failure. If, however, I have discovered this principle alone, then my soul will be filled with terror. I must also see the purpose."

The purpose is the working out of His will for each of us. He knows us, and He has a plan for our lives, and is able to make that plan come to pass if we permit Him to do so.

But, as Dr. Morgan says, "if I know principle and purpose only, I shall yet tremble and wonder, and be filled with a haunting foreboding." But as "I press through the principle and beyond the purpose and discover the Person of the Potter, then the purpose will flame with light, and the principle that appears so hard and severe will become the sweetest and tenderest thing in my life."

God spoke to Jeremiah through the scene in the potter's house, and He also wants to talk to our hearts.

II. God and Judah (vv. 5-10, 15a, 17a).

The lesson is plain. God had for His people a high and glorious purpose. He wanted to bless them and use them for His glory. But they were a sinful and rebellious people, stiff-necked and stubborn in their unbelief, and the vessel of honor which God was trying to form was marred in His hand.

God did not act in anger or in disregard of their rights. He was forced to bring judgment upon them because of their own sin. That sin is stated in verse 15—they had forgotten God.

One trembles as he applies that test of God's requirement for blessing upon a nation to our own land. There is a haunting fear that while there are some who truly worship God, and a larger number who profess to worship Him, a great host of the people of America have forgotten God.

Does our nation remember Him and seek His counsel and blessing in its national affairs? Do we inquire after the ways of righteousness? Are we eager for spiritual revival and increasing grace even within the church?

Judah was to be scattered "as with an east wind"—and who does not know that it came to pass. Where are they today?

But even in the midst of judgment the Lord speaks of mercy. The Lord who will "pluck up, break down and destroy" (v. 7) the people who forget Him, is eager and ready "to build and to plant" the nation when it turns to Him.

The sure promise of God's future blessing upon a repentant Israel and Judah is written large in the messages of all the prophets.

The same God, eternally sovereign in His purpose, is our heavenly Father. The man or woman whose vessel of life has been marred by sin and failure need only yield anew to the Potter's blessed hand.

Thunderhead

MARY O'HARA
W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: Flicka's colt, long overdue, is born on Goose Bar ranch, high in the Rockies. Ken McLaughlin, Flicka's 12-year-old owner, is startled to see that the colt is white, and evidently a throwback to the Albino, a wild horse that is Flicka's grandsire. Rob McLaughlin, Ken's father, rides out to bring in Banner, the stallion. With him go Colonel Harris and Charlie Sargent, millionaire horse breeder. Colonel Harris gets a wild ride. Later the party gets its first glimpse of the white colt. Nobody likes it but Ken. His mother, who names the horses, first calls it the Goblin, but later changes to Thunderhead for Ken's benefit. Ken tries to keep faith in his horse.

CHAPTER VI

They went down to dinner. "And now," said Rob genially, "Ken's got something to tell us. He's going to tell us who is really the sire of that white foal up in the corral."

Ken had thought he was prepared for it, but it was a shock all the same, and unpleasant feelings went through him. He couldn't find words. His mind was in a fog.

"The sire!" exclaimed Harris, astonished. "Why, what's this? I thought Banner was the sire of all your foals."

"Not that one," grinned Rob. "Your mare is perfectly safe, Mort. You'll have a fine little sorrel colt—dead ringer for Banner—when she foals next summer. I told you, Banner breeds true. Sorrels. Like as peas in a pod."

"Hah!" exclaimed Charley. "You're crawling. Just because you've got a throwback, you're going to disown it! Didn't think it of you, Rob!"

"Come on, Ken," said Rob, "who is the sire of that little goblin up there?"

Ken, without turning around, jerked his head and elbow in the direction of Charley Sargent. "That big black stud of his!"

"Whose?"

"Mr. Sargent's."

"Ouch!" shouted Sargent. Then, "Do you let him tell whoppers like that, Rob? Or is he given to pipe dreams?"

Rob was as astonished as anyone. "Appalachian, Ken?"

"Yes, sir."

"Why, he doesn't even know Appalachian," shouted Sargent. "Ken—did you ever see him? He's never been off my ranch, and that's twenty miles away."

"Ken answered, 'He's that big black stallion with three white socks and a white star between his eyes. He hangs out in that little draw by the quakin'-asp and the box elder where the fence crosses your line. Twenty miles away by the highway, but about eight miles of straight riding across country. Only one gate to go through, and your buck fence to take down.'"

There was a shocked silence. Then, as Ken's words sank home, Charley Sargent jumped to his feet. His long brown face was serious for once, his big hat a little awry, a frown between his brows.

"I don't believe it! It couldn't be! Why—that little misbegotten pup up there—son of Appalachian!" In two strides he reached Ken, seized him by the shoulder and yanked him up. "Stand up here." He set the boy on the low wooden table facing them all.

Ken's face was a little pale, but his dark blue eyes looked at his father without flinching.

"Come on, Ken," said Rob, "let's have the story. I'll begin it for you. A year ago last spring we decided Flicka should be bred."

"No, sir, it was the fall before that. About Thanksgiving time. You and mother said we'd breed Flicka as soon as she was old enough and get a foal."

"That's right. I remember now. You and Howard were home from school for the Thanksgiving weekend."

"Yes. And when we went back to school, all winter long I was thinking about that. And when I came home for the spring vacation at Easter, you remember you let me start working with Flicka and riding her a little, because she was just exactly two years old and strong and well-grown. And you said I was light enough so it wouldn't hurt her back any. And I worked her out with the blanket and surcingle and began to ride her. And during that vacation do you remember the time you took me in to town with you and we met Mr. Sargent and had dinner with him at the Mountain Hotel? And he was talking about his stud, about Appalachian. And bra—well, praising all the colts he had had from him—"

Ken paused, looking interrogatively at his father, and Rob grinned. "Yes, I remember. He praised 'em. It's a habit he's got."

Harris laughed and Sargent's hand pinched Ken's shoulder a little harder and he said, "Get on with your story, young man."

"Well, so you see—when I went back to school after that Easter vacation I was thinking about Appalachian."

Rob groaned. "And when Ken begins to think about something, I don't mind telling you, it's a single track mind."

"So," said Ken doggedly, "when I got home in June that's what I was thinking about. I rode over several times on Cigarette to look at Appalachian."

"The hell you did!" said Charley. "Well—" with some eagerness, "what did you think of him?"

"Oh," Ken's voice rose in enthusiasm, "just what you did! I agreed with all the proud things you said about him!"

"Thank you for that, son!"

"And what then, Ken?" asked Rob.

"Well, that was about the time to breed Flicka. And you told me to see to it."

Rob's eyes narrowed and glanced away as he tried to remember. Nell nodded. "I remember that, Rob. You had moved Banner and the brood mares up onto the Saddle Back. There were just the saddle mares in—Flicka and Taggart. And you told Ken it was his responsibility, and that when she came around he was to take her to the stallion."

Rob nodded. "I remember. Well, Ken?"

Ken's words came with a struggle. "Well you see, I had been thinking and thinking about Appalachian, because we wanted Flicka's foal to be a racer, and Banner was never a racer. And when I remembered all Mr. Sargent had said about him, and every colt he had got by him, why then—why then—"

"Well?" prompted Charley.

"Well, when she came in heat, I just rode her over there one day—it took me most of the day—and put her in the pasture with Appalachian—and when she was bred I rode her home again. That's all."

There was silence for a moment as Ken finished his recital. Suddenly Harris burst out laughing. Howard stared in open-mouthed awe at his younger brother. The stunt itself was nothing to the secrecy with which it had been concealed for more than a year. It was a faculty

"Flicka to Appalachian, 12:30 p. m. June 28."

Howard was envious of—to do unusual things—and then keep them entirely to yourself.

Rob said, "You took that long, sixteen-mile ride on your mare?"

"Yes, sir. I got off and rested her now and then. You were letting me ride her because you said she had grown so well and I hadn't."

It was true. Ken was still no larger than he had been at ten.

Rob thought again. "You must have been away most of the day. I don't remember it."

Ken said, "It was a day when you and mother had been in town. And you stayed there for lunch and you didn't get home until late in the afternoon." Ken was keeping his biggest punch to the end. "Anyway, I can prove it to you, dad," he added.

"How?"

Ken stepped down from the witness stand and vanished into the house. They heard his steps going upstairs. He returned holding out a paper, folded and wrinkled and soiled. He handed it to Rob who opened it with a mystified air and read it silently, then passed it to Charley.

Sargent stared at it a long time, then read aloud slowly, "FLICKA TO APPALACHIAN, 12:30 P. M. JUNE 28th."

Sargent flung down the paper, sprang to his feet and shouted, "I don't believe it!" then, with one long leap over the flower border, turned his back and went striding up to the corral.

"This beats me," said Rob. "I didn't dream it was Appalachian. I knew it wasn't Banner. What I thought was that the Albino was somewhere in the neighborhood again and that he had got to the mare—or perhaps that Ken's mind had been working overtime and cooked up some crazy scheme and that he had taken her out to him."

Charlie came striding back. "Gimme a drink, Rob—if this is true, it's a terrible blow."

"It's true all right," said Colonel Harris. "I watched Ken's face when he told it. His face was straight and the story's straight."

Charley gulped down the drink Rob poured for him and as Rob filled the other glasses, held his out again.

"Hope this won't make you take to drink, Charley," said Harris dryly. "Brace up! Lots of people have family secrets to hide!"

"We won't give it away, Charley," chuckled Rob.

Charley didn't even hear them. He threw off his hat and ran one hand distractedly through his hair. "Maybe it didn't take," he exclaimed suddenly. "Maybe, later on in the summer she was bred by some other stallion. That's it!" he said excitedly. "You said the colt came months later than you expected!"

But Ken shook his head. "She was never out on the range again. You see, that was the first summer I had been able to do much with her or ride her at all. She was a two-year-old. And I had her down here in the stable or the home pasture all summer so that she would be well schooled by the time I had to leave the ranch in the fall. And there weren't any other stallions around."

Nell nodded. "That's true. She was underfoot all summer. Ken did everything but have her in the kitchen."

"I did have her in the kitchen, Mother! Remember the time you put the oat bucket in the kitchen sink, and I called her in, and she walked right in and went all around the kitchen, looking at everything and smelling it, and then ate her oats at the sink?"

"Look here, Ken," said Rob, "do you realize that you stole that service? You heard what Mr. Sargent said at dinner—that the stud fee for Appalachian is $250.00."

"I've always told you, Ken," his father rubbed it in, "that you cost me money every time you turn around."

"Cost you money!"

"Well—you owe that money to Charley here and you can't pay it."

"No, sir."

"Someone's got to pay it."

"I should say—ay-ay-ay!" exclaimed Charley. "If that's the Appalachian's foal, you owe me for nothing. On the contrary, I owe Ken an apology. And the nice little mare too."

Ken began to breathe again and glanced at his father to see if there were to be any penalties from that quarter.

"If Mr. Sargent forgives you the debt, Ken, I've got nothing to say." "Here comes the Goblin now!" exclaimed Howard.

Gus had let the horses out of the corral to pasture and Flicka and her foal and Taggart and the geldings were coming to water at the round stone fountain in the middle of the Green.

The men and boys went down to look at them more closely.

"That's a beautiful mare," said Charley, looking at Flicka's glossy golden coat, her full, flaxen tail and mane, and the gentleness and intelligence in the golden eyes she turned to them. She mouthed the cool water, letting streams of it run from her muzzle, then turned her head to her foal again.

"Dad," said Ken miserably, "is he—really—so awful?"

Rob hesitated. "Well, Ken, nobody could say he has good conformation. He is shaped like a full-grown horse, a bronc at that. He'll have to change a good deal."

"But he will, dad! He'll grow!"

"He'll have to grow in some spots and shrink in others. That jug-head!"

Ken looked at the head. It was certainly too large. It had a terribly stubborn look.

"Hi, fellah" said Charley to the foal, then turned to Ken. "Well, you win, Ken. I believe your story. Your Goblin is by my Appalachian, and if you want papers, you can have them."

"I can only have half papers, sir, because Flicka only has half papers."

"You oughtn't to have any papers at all with a stolen service, Ken," said his father.

"I'll waive that," said Charley. "Do you realize, Rob, that this little Goblin has Appalachian for a sire, Banner for a grandsire, and the Albino for a great grandsire? That ought to be enough T.N.T. to bust him wide open."

Winter again. Blizzards. Wild storms. Days of terrible loneliness and fear with Rob out in weather when a man should be safe beside his own fire—perhaps on the highways hauling feed in the truck, and the day passing—hours crawling past with no sign of him returning. Then night coming on. She'd be standing by the north window at the far end of the house looking out into the darkness, watching. For what? What could you see in the inky blackness? Or even if it was daylight what could you see but snow falling and falling, white as a winding sheet? You could see the lights. The two big headlights of Rob's truck coming, way off on the ranch road. You could catch them soon after the truck left the Lincoln Highway, lose them when they curved in near the woods, then catch them again before they came down the hill. Lights boring through the darkness coming slowly down the hill with a load of oats or baled hay.

Your 1945 Garden Pest and Disease Control Require Daily Supervision

WHO'S going to eat your garden, you or the bugs? Of course, the answer is obvious, but you must do something about it if you are to do the eating.

Having in mind the importance of food production in Victory gardens as essential in the war effort, Mr. Victory Gardener must regard insect pests and plant diseases in the same category as the Nazis and the Japs—unconditional surrender must be the terms.

But regardless of the care and skill shown in selecting the garden site, in the cultivation and fertilization of the soil and in the selection and planting, all such efforts—involving the use of critical and scarce supplies of seeds, fertilizers and tools—may be nullified, or partly so, by the depredations of insects and diseases unless steps are taken to control them.

Information regarding the purchase of insecticides and fungicide materials may be obtained through experienced local gardeners, local dealers in agricultural supplies, local seedsmen, general or drug stores or through the county agents, the state department of agriculture extension service, or your local state agricultural college. Or you may write the United States department of agriculture.

Care in Applying Dust Essential

Particular care should be taken in applying poisonous insecticides and fungicides in excessive quantities. Also care should be taken that all poison spray or dust is thoroughly and carefully removed from the foliage of any vegetable before it is prepared for food.

Every gardener should have available, even before he starts his planting, a duster or sprayer for applying insecticides and fungicides. For small gardens, a duster is probably preferable because use of dust is easier than the preparation and handling of sprays.

Important, is to be ready for the bugs when they arrive. Of course, we cannot set down here the proper preventive or cure for all disease and insect pests. But start fighting at the first sign of damage to the crop.

Rotenone-contained insecticide is essential to have on hand. It is used, especially after fruit has begun to form, for Mexican bean beetle, spotted cucumber beetle, flea beetles, on beans and other plants; cabbage caterpillars, striped cucumber beetles, melon and pickle worms, lettuce loopers, pea weevils, Japanese beetles and European corn borers.

A cheesecloth duster may be used to dust plants for control of leafhoppers.

Another necessary insecticide to have on hand is cryolite, which may be used for essentially the same insects before the fruit has formed on the plants.

Bordeaux mixture is also often effective against all eating insects and some fungus growths. Nicotine dust or nicotine sulphate as a spray is generally used for aphids, or plant lice.

Insects and Pests Among Vegetables

There are the general feeders on plant life such as ants, cutworms, grasshoppers, Japanese beetles, millipedes, mole crickets, slugs and snails, sowbugs, vegetable weevils, white grubs and wireworms. Most of these can be controlled with poison bait composed of a mixture of sodium fluosilicate or paris green (¼ pound), dry, flaky wheat bran, five pounds, and three or four quarts of water. Prepare in the morning and apply late in the day.

Vegetable troubles are due to numerous causes, including unfavorable soil conditions—too wet or too dry, too rich or too poor, lack of humus or lime, weather unsuited to some crops, careless use of fertilizers, or attacks of fungi or other parasites.

The control of diseases caused by fungi, bacteria, and other enemies requires special additional treatment, as does the damage caused by insects. The use of disease-free seed and plants is fundamental to all disease control. They can be purchased this year.

Household Hints

Cellar walls should be looked after frequently to keep water and dampness from seeping in and rotting out or undermining the foundation of the house.

A high thread count in sheets indicates a good construction, fine weave, and a good appearance that will last.

A quick and easy way to clean windows is to take a paper towel and rub over the windows on a damp day.

Parsley will keep fresh for a week or ten days if stored in a wide-mouthed screw-top jar.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Adam and Fallen Man" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, May 13.

The Golden Text was, "They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God" (Romans 8: 8).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "And God said, Let us make man in our image after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. . . . And God saw every thing that he had made, and behold, it was very good" (Gen. 1: 26, 27, 31).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The Scriptures are very sacred. Our aim must be to have them understood spiritually, for only by this understanding can truth be gained. . . . It may be worth while here to remark that, according to the best scholars, there are clear evidences of two distinct documents in the early part of the book of Genesis. . . . The Science of the first record proves the falsity of the second. If one is true, the other is false, for they are antagonistic. . . . Popular theology takes up the history of man as if he began materially right, but immediately fell into mental sin; whereas revealed religion proclaims the Science of Mind and its formations as being in accordance with the first chapter of the Old Testament, when God, Mind, spoke and it was done" (pp. 547, 523, 522, 557).

Farmers to benefit from new telephone developments

The half-million miles of existing telephone pole lines make it possible for 80% of the nation's rural and farm families to obtain telephone service as easily as for families in built-up areas. In the territory served by the Illinois Bell Telephone Company the majority of farm families have telephone service.

Our first job is to help win the war, but as soon as conditions permit, many new devices and methods will be used to further improve and extend farm telephone service. They include such important developments as new types of wire for rural areas, a dial system for small communities, and a way to use electric power lines in transmitting telephone messages.

These and other developments will bring telephone service to more and more farmers when men and materials are available.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Semmler and family:

Here's hoping that you don't think that I've forgotten about you and the people back home. There's really no excuse for my not writing sooner. But I never was much good at writing letters, so you can see that I don't have much ambition.

A few days back I was honored with a phone call from 1st Lt. Paul Meyers. It sure was good to hear someone's voice that I knew. I also had a letter from George Hentsch. He said he was getting along pretty good and if he could get a pass he was going to get up and see me. How are things going back in back there. I surely hope to some day.

Give my regards to everyone and I hope this finds everybody in the best of health.

Sincerely Your Neighbor

Barney Moore's

Tavern

ORLAND PARK, ILL.

WHO will be the rookie of the year for 1945, a year when rookies are about as scarce as wild turkeys that feed out of your hand?

Sam Breadon, the Irish - panned owner of the St. Louis Cardinals, knows more about rookies and has had more good beginners than anyone else in baseball. Year after year, the Cardinals have come up with recruits who proved to be better than many well - known veteran stars.

Breadon keeps his eyes on the kids. Their salaries are never too high, but St. Louis is far from being the hottest baseball town in the country, so far as attendance figures show.

You can understand Sam Breadon's enthusiasm when he figures that he has not only the best rookie of 1945, but one of the best of all time.

All of the aforementioned is by way of leading up to a recent remark made by Breadon as he watched Billy Southworth ready his Cardinals for another National league campaign. The experts were saying that the Cards were a cinch and that the all-time record of four straight 100-a-year victories was as good as in Al Munro Elias's statistics, but Breadon wasn't thinking about the Cards in general but of a freckled-faced kid playing left field.

'Better Than Musial'

"He's a better prospect right now than was Stan Musial when he reported to us," remarked Breadon—and a half dozen reporters' pencils dug into note pads almost before Sam's words were dry in the hot St. Louis air.

"Better than Musial? Say, wasn't that taking in a lot of territory?"

"Well," Breadon hastened to remark, "I mean he can do more things. He's a good infielder; he can play the outfield as you now see. We could use him at second, short, third, left, center or right and stop worrying about any position he took over. He's as fast as they come and those minor league batting averages are no flukes. Watch him. He's the rookie of the year."

And who was the target of all this tall praise? Well, you'll hear a lot about him this year—Albert (Red) Schoendienst, a typesetter's headache but a manager's dream.

Here's a player who has been headline bait ever since he walked into a ball park. Well, almost since that first day. The weight of numbers obscured his first trek to Sportsmen's Park for he was one of 300 or 400 kids invited in 1942 for a tryout school. As a matter of fact, Schoendienst just walked in with a pal from Germantown, Ill., and told the Cardinal scouts he would like to be a ball player. He was put through a series of tests—races, throwing contests, batting drills—and, after the scouts had prepared a few notes on him he was excused and told he could stay for the ball game that afternoon of June 18, 1942. He returned home not knowing when he would be called again.

Quickly Signed Up

He didn't have to wait long. The Cardinals' Union City, Tenn. team in the Kitty league sent an SOS to the parent ball club and the St. Louis board of strategy, after a hurried meeting, decided to sign up the kid redhead.

As I said, Schoendienst was headline-happy from the start. He was batting .407 when the league disbanded and finished the season with Albany, Ga., where he hit .269. The spring of '43 found him at Portsmouth (Piedmont league) but when he opened the season with eight straight hits he was rushed up to Rochester where Pepper Martin found him as enjoyable as an old Western "gee-tah." Schoendienst resumed his blasting in his new uniform, finished the season with an average of .337, and was declared the league's most valuable player—an unusual honor for a rookie. After 25 games in 1944, in which he hit .373, he was called into the army.

An old eye injury caused him to be discharged. In fact, his left eye is practically blind. But this is an era when men overcome handicaps such as these and Schoendienst did so by becoming a switch hitter. Now experts will tell you he packs more punch as a southpaw swatter than he does as a right-handed raper, his original stance at the plate.

Gordon or Doerr?

One of the main arguments among war hospital partisans is the choice between Joe Gordon of the Yankees and Bobby Doerr of the Red Sox.

Here's part of the answer—Gordon's five-year batting average was .284 — Doerr's seven year average was around .293. Gordon in his five years belted out 125 home runs while Doerr in his seven years hit only 87 four-baggers. Gordon also had a good lead in the matter of runs-batted-in. This leaves them pretty well matched offensively.

Vegetable Oil Crop Needs Continue High

Total Fat and Oil Supplies Decrease

GROWERS of vegetable oil crops are being urged by the War Food administration to remember pressing war needs for those oils and to keep production at a high level by meeting their acreage goals.

Total oil crop acreage is substantially increased over 1944, although most of the change comes from the Canning Vegetable Oils.

64 per cent step-up on flaxseed. The peanut goal is down slightly, but emphasis is being placed on increasing acre yield to offset the smaller plantings. Final goal for peanuts picked and threshed is 3,230,000 acres.

Harvest of 10,757,000 acres of soybeans is sought, and planting of the needed 5,000,000 acres of flaxseed is already well under way.

Demand for fats and oils is expected to continue strong in 1945, while the total available supply will be considerably reduced. Production of some 9.8 billion pounds from domestic materials is anticipated, over 1 billion pounds less than the 10.9 billion pounds produced in 1944. Chief cause given is lower lard production.

Domestic edible oils — cottonseed, soybean, corn and peanut—may reach a total production 100 to 200 million pounds more this year than last, largely due to an increased harvest of cottonseed from the 1944 crop.

Military demands for fats and oils, including butter and lard, are heavy, both for the expanded military program and for relief distribution in areas under military jurisdiction.

Preliminary estimates made by United States department of agriculture experts indicate a domestic disappearance of fat and oil products in 1944 totalling more than 10.3 billion pounds (in terms of fat content), for an increase of about 400 million pounds over 1943. Expanded production of soap for the military, with some increase for civilians, is believed to have been the major factor.

Domestic disappearance of cottonseed oil declined 172 million pounds last year, reflecting the reduction in output, but the effect on supplies of food fats was partly offset by an increase of 101 million pounds in the use of soybean oil for this purpose.

Agriculture In the News

W. J. DRYDEN

White Oak

The oaks are among the most important hardwood species in the United States, due to large quantity of oak available and its strength and beauty. There are 80 different species of oak, scattered over nearly all parts of the country.

The wood of the white oaks generally lacks the reddish tinge common in the red oaks. It grows slowly, so is not as profitable for timber planting as red oak.

In planting, best results are obtained from acorns, instead of transplanting the deep taproot young trees. The tree is valuable for ornamental planting, furniture, flooring, motor vehicle parts, railroad cars, general millwork, boxes and crates, caskets and coffins, ship and boat building, agricultural implements, railroad ties, fuel, cooperage and mine timbers.

Hands Carry Mastitis

The streptococci bacteria which cause most cases of mastitis can be carried on the milker's hands, despite the most thorough scrubbing and disinfection, according to the University of Wisconsin specialists.

The organisms were found on hands of milkers six to eight hours after the last milking. Control is easier on milking machines. No bacteria was found on hands of men who used milking machines, doing only the stripping by hand.

Notes of an Innocent Bystander:

The Wireless: Radio's coverage of the San Francisco confab is all aces. The news analysts are turning the pockets of their minds inside out and presenting perplexing peace problems with admirable clarity. They are driving home the issues which will affect every American home. . . . Nothing more soothing than the Nazi shortwavers' blah-by-blah description of Vermyny's dying gasps. . . . Commentator Baukhage's adroit delivery packs a wallop. His recent radio report of FDR's interment landed in the Congressional Record. . . . Rita Hayworth's quip-banding with Cholly McCarthy kept the chuckles rolling at a swift pace. . . . Talk about crimson faces. A current best-seller means that America is skidding into "collectivism." The tome's author appeared on the Chi. Round Table and was asked to give a clear definition of "collectivism." He flunked the query.

Memos for a Scrapbook: In a literary weekly John Mason Brown has embroidered a delightful bit of literary lace: "Praise has never made anyone unhappy. We like it even when we do not believe it. We tire of it only when it is bestowed too long on other people. It is music we do not object to having played offstage. Although it may shame our consciences and insult our minds, it does no damage to our ears."

Between the Book Ends: Top-flight reporter Ira Wolfert has captured the sordid tragedy, flaming courage and shining hopes of the current struggle via "American Guerrilla in the Philippines" (Simon & Schuster). This slam-bang chronicle of Lt. I. D. Richardson's exploits creates a spiritual glow. . . . Most timely is A. E. Kahn and Michael Sayers' "The Plot Against the Peace" (Dial Press). Here are the names of the fascist peace-wreckers and their battle strategy. . . . Morris L. Ernst's "The Best Is Yet" offers a sizzling series of essays. His most crushing hay-makers land on the few prestatutes in our midst. Such "journalists" can cover their depravity with lofty rhetoric, but they can't hide their shame.

Quotation Marksmanship: A. Ward: Let us all be happy and live within our means, even if we have to borrow money to do it with. . . . R. C. Sherriff: The telephone began calling out like a spoiled child, and he hurried off to soothe it. . . . Dorothy Parker: She said her words with every courtesy to each of them, as if she respected language. . . . The Jergens Journal: And so I remain Your New York Correspondent who, in this babble of tongues, just found out that Eden means garden, Molotov means hammer, Stalin means steel and Truman—means business.

Stalingrad rocked under a murderous barrage. Late one night, a creaking ferryboat, piloted by a wheezened old boatman, was smashed by a shell. The old man and a young lieutenant aboard were thrown into the river. The heavily-packed soldier started to go down. . . . "Here," shouted the old man, "take this life preserver," and looped it over the officer's shoulder. The lieutenant tried to push it away. . . . "Stop, you fool," screamed the boatman. "I'm old—my arm is missing. I'm through. But you're young and can fight. Take the preserver. Hold Stalingrad!"

Just another unsung, unknown hero in the fight for Decency.

Counter-Attack:

Little Inna Bentago is a six-year-old orphan. Her father—killed at the front. Her mother—by a Nazi bomb. . . . On Red Army Day all the other children in her kindergarten class were busy writing letters to their fathers or brothers. Inna came sobbing to Natasha Zemskaya, her teacher. "I have no Daddy and no one to write to." Natasha comforted the child and told her to write to Lt. Alexander Kuksenok. . . . Little Inna laboriously poured her heart into a scrawling letter. Soon she received an answer. "Don't you cry, little Inna," wrote the lieutenant. "From now on I'm your brother. I am sending you a little gift. Be a good girl. Love, Alex." . . . Each week Alex wrote to his newly adopted sister. . . . Suddenly the letters stopped. After several weeks, Inna received a note. It was signed by a hundred soldiers and said: "Alex has been killed, but do not feel bad. His last wish was for all of us to become your brothers. So now you have a very large family, a hundred brothers. Be a good girl and write to us. Love. . . ."

Ilya Ehrenberg, Soviet newspaper man, writes of his talk with a German sergeant: "He (the sergeant) limped out of the forest, leaning on a walking stick. . . . The most expressive thing about him was that stick. On it were carved the names of the cities he had been in: Ration, Warsaw, Liege, Namur, Rheims, Paris, Smolensk, and Vyazma."

"Observing that I was scrutinizing the stick, the Nazi said, 'We've been everywhere. But where have we got to?'"

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery. Symptoms may be nagging backaches, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination. There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills.
